Poverty isn't always easy to see

You can help end poverty.

Poverty isn't always easy to see in New Zealand, but it's all around us—in our communities and our neighbourhoods, behind the doors of family homes, down alleyways at night, and even in the workplace.

Sometimes it's hidden because the thousands of people living in poverty don't want you to see it, for fear of being judged or ostracised. Other times it's because people choose not to see it—after all, how could a country as beautiful and prosperous as New Zealand have so many people living day-to-day in poverty, often not knowing where their next meal is coming from?

But it's everywhere, in every city and every town. And these people need your help—not only to survive, but to lift themselves out of poverty forever and live independent, happy lives.

The Salvation Army helps over 120,000 Kiwis each year, working to lift them out of poverty by providing a range of short and long-term support and guidance to those in crisis. We're committed to ending poverty in New Zealand, but we can't do it alone. You can make a difference to those in need, because seeing poverty is not enough—we must act now.
